Yeast Infection Symptoms Change

Strange Yeast infection symptoms occur. They vary from person to person. And with one person the symptoms can change from day to day. They may vary based on the person's general health or genetic makeup. This is the one of the reasons that there are so many different symptoms.

75% of the population, it has been estimated, suffer from some sort of yeast infection at some time in their life.

To treat yeast infection you have to treat what caused the infection in the first place. The root cause. Everyone knows what a flare up of vaginal yeast infection or diaper rash is. You get some medicine and it clears up, right?

But did you REALLY cure the infection or did you just treat the symptoms?

Chronic Yeast Infection

You treated the symptoms in most cases and the yeast infection is still there. Unless you treated the root cause of the yeast infection you have not solved the problem. There will still be a low level of the yeast cells present... just waiting until conditions are right for another Flare-up.

Most people don't know what a chronic yeast infection is or the damage it can do. Many people become so accustomed to their symptoms they think their symptoms are simply just part of growing older or part of their lives.

It is a simple fact that yeast, thrush, and Candida can be cured permanently. Once and for all completely eliminated. You can treat the root cause of yeast infection. And you can do this easily and safely in the privacy of your home. Even if your doctor may have told you differently! Hard to believe, isn't it?

Since natural cures can not be patented by drug companies these natural cures are not profitable for them. They do not spend money researching them and do not promote them. Drug companies are required by law to make a profit & are not required by law to make drugs that help people. This shocking fact is not common knowledge.

Drugs do not treat the root cause of the yeast infection. They mask the symptoms for a while. The yeast becomes resistant to the treatment and the infection comes back even worse than before.
